“ To try and convey the true impact of one's life with mere words is folly, so I'll share a little of what Sistah meant to me. I can honestly say that my love for collecting was fostered by two people in my life, my father and Sistah. From taking me and Lenny to numerous rummage sales throughout my childhood, to all the beautiful antiques she had acquired and shared a story over one of the many times I sat on her porch, I was always fascinated by what value the forgotten things may hold. Though I've never truly amassed anything of significant value over the years, the love and yearning for it, was partially fostered through her. Some of my greatest childhood memories had her fingerprint on them. To sleepover on Fridays in the summer and her come in the room early Saturday morning and ask us if we wanted to go fishing while she worked cleaning the house on the lake, was always an unexpected and welcome treat. Lord knows I wasn't always enthralled to sit through church on Sundays, and even though Sistah was a strict and stern usher coming around with a fan to place our gum on as service was starting, every now and then, when the sermon started and the ushers were seated, Sistah would reach in her purse and pass us a butterscotch or piece of candy to aid in keeping us focused on the pastor's words. As we close this holiday season, Christmas time as a child was always an extravagant event for the Torrence family as everyone gathered at Nana's on that day to share/exchange gifts, but what I'll always cherish was the delicious food everyone bought for the feast including Sistah's baked chicken and rice, shelled peas and buttered rolls. Her wedding cookies and buttered thin pecan cookies will always remain as one of my favorite holiday treats. When it comes to my Aunt Sistah, these are just a few of the memories I've shared, but I'll cherish many more that she created. Thank God for having had you in my life. Rest in Peace, my favorite Aunt. To my cousins Bernard and Lenny: Though there's nothing I can say to ease the discomfort and pain you are currently feeling, please understand that God has the wheel, he is in full control and all things happen according to his plans. I too share your pain in losing such a beautiful and kind woman. We were all truly blessed to have witnessed and experienced the goodness of her heart.
