“ Mom, never in my wildest dream, I would have thought this day would come. I know what the bible teaches about death, but I prayed in faith that by his stripes you would be healed. I must admit this journey with your illness was hard and at times unbearable, but I somehow kept the faith, that God was going to turn things around. I remember standing at your hospital bedside pleading the blood of Jesus over your life. I am still walking in disbelief that you have finally transition from this earth. I am lost, because you left me, your baby boy behind. You taught me to be a man, but would always remind me that I was still your baby. O how I wish the phone would ring, just to hear your voice saying "Eric, I am calling to check on you!"

In my opinion, you were the perfect mom, for the not so perfect son. I enjoyed the ride as you carried me to this place called adulthood. You made sure I had everything needed to be successful in life. You made sure, I had a relationship with the Lord, you made sure, I always remembered yesterday and who helped me get to the next step in life.

Mom, you taught me to be strong and to always work hard for everything. You taught me how to give and believe God will give it back press down and shaken together. I remember the nights of walking out of your hospital room while the tears flowed down my face. I remember constantly asking God to perform a miracle as I drove home.

I must admit, I don't know how I can possibly go on without you here on earth. I get weak thinking about your service and having to see you in the casket. I cant, with an honest heart, say you are in a better place. I believe the best place for you was with me. Me and dad cried together today.

I must stop now, because I cant see the keys on the computer, because of the tears in my eyes. I Love you and need you more than ever.
