POEM

I have a favorite color and it’s always been blue. But when I was asked the other day, somehow without hesitation, I screamed out YELLOW. I screamed with such excitement it could not be described I immediately saw yellow in a whole new way. Yellow suddenly reminded me of your smile; the way your teeth glimmered in the sunlight and the way it drew people in with its brightness. It reminded me of days in the sun playing without a care in the world. When people ask me what my favorite color is, my mind now immediately slips into the sunflowers and dandelions and Sun kissed memories of your bright yellow aura. It reminds me that grief never ends but it changes. It is a passage, not a place to stay. It is not a sign of weakness but it is the price of remembering your bright and vibrant love. Even though some time has passed and during that time the sun warm color turned into murky green yellows and sour candies, I could still see the sunbeams and walk towards them. As long as the sun shines, we can feel your presence.

You will live on inside of our memories forever. I see yellow in a whole new light now. For that is all my once red heart now turned a golden knows. I want to thank God for allowing us to borrow his sun. Because now we will never forget your warmth.
